I have a different encryption working with 128-bit but I am failing with this Aes 256. Any suggestions on how I can fix the problem?. I am calling the encryption function here : $encrypted = mcrypt_encrypt(MCRYPT_RIJNDAEL_256, $secret, $value, MCRYPT_MODE_CBC, $iv); A: MCRYPT_RIJNDAEL_256 is not AES. It is Blowfish, and that is not the same as AES. I have absolutely no idea why you are trying to use a 224-bit variant. It is likely that the confusion is because of this problem: The difference between block cipher modes like CBC or ECB is often wrongly considered one of speed, without any regard to the method. This is completely wrong! The speed of a cipher can be measured by results of "good" implementations. In case of CBC and ECB, the difference in speed is actually in the opposite direction: ECB is slower than CBC, which makes ECB less suitable for encrypting large files with many blocks. Furthermore, ECB is most vulnerable to attacks, for example against the BEAST attack. But I also note that you are saying that you tried AES-256 only to find out that you were actually using Blowfish... Well, while Blowfish is actually a block cipher, it has some issues. The one that you're describing is not the one you're trying to use, but rather a derivative of it. Anyway, back to the point: Now, your AES implementation with $iv seems to be correct, otherwise I could not see a reason why you are using $iv for it. You are probably using the Blowfish variant
